Hiring Manager
EchoPark Automotive — Orlando
Sonic Automotive

Dear Hiring Manager,

I'd like to apply for the Automotive Finance Manager position at your new Orlando store.

Let me start with the move, since it's probably the first thing you'd wonder about. I'm in Miami now, but my son, daughter-in-law, and granddaughter are all in the Orlando area — so moving up there is something I want to do anyway. I won't be getting homesick for South Florida in six months.

I noticed you call this role Finance Coach, and that's the part that got my attention. I've run the finance office at Bill Seidle's Nissan for twenty-eight years, and honestly the sales floor has been as much of my job as the desk. I've spent those years teaching salespeople how to structure a deal, what has to be disclosed, and how to walk a guest into my office without losing the guest or the gross. Forecasting with them, sitting in sales meetings, answering for the department's numbers — that's been my every month for most of my career.

Here's what else I'd bring:

- Lender relationships, thirty years of them. Banks, captives, credit unions, across the whole credit spectrum. On a busy used-vehicle floor, that network is what turns a tough deal into a delivery instead of a guest walking out.
- Numbers somebody else graded. Six-time Nissan Award of Excellence winner, and Platinum in Nissan Security Plus every year since 2005. Different brand and a different model than yours, I know — but the performance behind those awards is what I'd bring to your office.
- Paperwork you won't have to worry about. Truth in Lending, the Fair Credit Reporting Act, Red Flags, OFAC — thousands of funded deals, clean and ready for an audit. A brand-new store shouldn't have to go back and fix that habit later.
- English and Spanish, both fluent. Most of my guests over the last three decades have been taken care of in one or the other. I expect that matters in Orlando about as much as it does here.
- No ramp-up. CDK, DealerTrack, and Reynolds & Reynolds, every day. And I'm happy to work evenings, weekends, and holidays — that's the business.

A store opening in December needs a finance office that's working in January, not one still finding its feet in March. After thirty years I have a pretty good idea of what makes that office fast, clean, and profitable, and I'd like to help you build this one. I'd welcome the chance to sit down and go through my numbers with you.

Sincerely,

Santos Echevarria
